

SUMMARY STATEMENT

Tenny v. Loomis Armored US, LLC

Docket No. 48100

This is an appeal arising from a decision of the Idaho Industrial Commission. In December 2014, Tenny sustained a right-sided lumbar disc herniation injury during the course of his employment with Loomis Armored US (Loomis). He immediately began treatment, receiving a series of right-sided steroid injections in his back at L3-4. At some point shortly after the second injection, Tenny began to complain of increasing left hip and groin pain and underwent testing and treatment for these symptoms. However, the worker's compensation insurance surety, Ace American Insurance Co., ultimately denied payment for treatment related to the left-sided groin pain. Following the matter going to hearing, the Referee recommended that the Industrial Commission find that the left-sided symptoms were causally related to Tenny's December 2014 industrial accident. The Industrial Commission adopted the Referee's findings, and after unsuccessfully moving for reconsideration, the employer and surety appealed to this Court. On appeal, the Idaho Supreme Court affirmed the Commission's determination that Tenny's left-sided groin pain was causally related to his industrial accident.
