

SUMMARY STATEMENT
State of Idaho v. Ronald J. Myers
Docket No. 51671

In this case arising out of Ada County, the Court of Appeals reversed the district court's order granting Ronald J. Myers' motion to suppress. An officer conducted a traffic stop and contacted Myers, the driver of the vehicle. A canine unit officer arrived at the scene with a drug dog and deployed the dog to perform a drug-detection sniff of the vehicle. On one occasion during the sniff, the drug dog touched the vehicle's door handle with his nose. Ultimately, the drug dog alerted to the presence of narcotics in the vehicle and a subsequent search revealed methamphetamine and paraphernalia. Myers moved to suppress the evidence, arguing the drug dog's contact with the vehicle's door rendered the search unlawful. The district court agreed and granted Myers' motion, concluding that the drug dog's contact with the vehicle amounted to intermeddling and was therefore a trespass. The district court also determined that, under the totality of the circumstances, the drug dog's behaviors prior to touching the vehicle were insufficient to establish probable cause. On appeal, the State argued the district court erred in granting Myers' motion to suppress, asserting there was either no contact or the drug dog's minimal contact with the vehicle was not a search under the Fourth Amendment. The Court agreed and held a Fourth Amendment "search" did not occur in this case because the drug dog did not physically occupy Myers' vehicle. Instead, the Court held that the drug dog's physical contact with the exterior of Myers' vehicle was the kind of incidental touching that occurs in everyday-type commotions and does not implicate the Fourth Amendment. The State also argued the district court erred when it determined the search of Myers' vehicle was unsupported by probable cause. The Court agreed and held that the evidence in the record, including the canine unit officer's on-body camera video footage and testimony, established probable cause to support the search of Myers' vehicle for narcotics. As a result, the Court reversed the district court's order granting Myers' motion to suppress and remanded the case.

This summary constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by court staff for the convenience of the public.