  This 30-minute segment takes the information from parts I and II and applies it to creating a trauma-responsive court experience. This segment summarized lessons learned and recommendations from the NCJFCJ's trauma consultation experience with more than 20 courts nationwide.

  This 15-minute segment focuses on how NCJFCJ has applied an understanding of trauma and its effects to create the conditions of healing that can be promoted within juvenile and family courts. The core components of healing (as identified in NCJFCJ's conceptual framework) are presented and examples are provided for how and why these are helpful in working with traumatized youth and families.

  This 20-minute segment provides a brief overview of trauma and its effects on child and adolescent development, and includes information on the adverse childhood experiences study.
